The results of this study indicate that there are 2 types of implicature, namely conventional and non-conventional. the results of the conversational implicature analysis conducted by the author on Raditya Dika's Stand Up Comedy entitled Youtuber Many Haters which aired on December 19 2017 on Raditya Dika's YouTube channel, researchers found conventional implicature and non-conventional implicature. The researcher also found 4 implicature functions, namely Assertive function, Expressive function, Directive function, and Commissive function. However, in this stand up comedy the researcher did not find a declarative function because the text is more likely to express the author's emotions, opinions, invitations, or intentions than to convey factual statements.

Introduction
Stand Up Comedy is a form of modern comedy art performance. Usually a comedian/comic appears in front of the audience bringing jokes, speaking directly to them and facing the audience's reactions directly and immediately (Papana, 2016). Stand up comedy tells of anxiety which is then made fun of. The set up is built based on anxiety which is used as an expectation or things that are experienced or felt by the audience, then broken by punchlines which are built through simple jokes or using certain comedic techniques (Sastya, 2022). Typically, comedians use personal experiences, everyday observations, and contemporary events as material for humor. Stand-up comedy performances are often based on live dialogue between comedians and the audience, creating interactive and entertaining interactions.

Literature Review

Language
Language is a communication tool that is used to express oneself in the form of ideas, thoughts, and feelings directed at others (Rizandi & Aprisari, 2022). In principle, language is a tool for communication and a tool for showing the identity of people who use language. It is a fact that humans use language as a vital means of communication in life (Waqori, 2018).

Language is part of culture and language cannot stand alone. The human behavior of language users has several aspects, namely attitudes, customs, and culture (Nuryani, 2022).

Implicature
Grice claims implication is a theory of how meaning can be shown rather than communicated (Jaszcolt, 2002). The point of this is that the meaning in its implications is not seen from the written meaning or the actual meaning but the meaning of the listener's perception. With this understanding we can move on to exploring, namely, the principles that have been proposed as command operating implications in conversation. Another view expressed by (Djajasudarma, 2012) implicature is an additional implied meaning that must be maintained if the principle of cooperation can be implemented.

Conversational implicature occurs because of the fact that an utterance that has implications is in the form of a proposition that is actually not part of the utterance. Conversational implicature is derived from the general principles of conversation plus a number of tips that speakers usually obey (Brown & Yule, 1996).

Implicature is closely related to agreement on meaning in a speech activity (Nababan, 1987). Implicature can be said as a tool to find implied meanings in an utterance. There are two types of implicature proposed by Grice, namely: (1) conventional implicature and (2) unconventional implicature.

Conventional Implicature
Conventional implicature is a meaning that is not revealed by speakers, but in general people can understand it from what speakers mean in a conversation (Rahmawati et al., 2020). Conventional implicature contains implications that are obtained directly from the meaning of words (heard) not from conversational principles (Kurnia et al., 2019). (Mulyana, 2005) argues that conventional implicatures are general in nature, which means that in general people already know the intent and meaning of something in an utterance.

Non-Conventional Implicature
Rusminto, (2009) says that non-conventional conversational implicature is a type of implicature that hides the intent of speech in a conversation through something that is actually implicit in the language. Agree with (Arifianti, 2018) Unconventional implicature is an utterance that implies something that is different from the truth. Unconventional implicature is an implicature that bases its meaning more on a context surrounding a conversation (Desnita et al., 2021).
Implicature Function

Conversational implicature has an implied speech meaning that can be understood depending on the context and ability to do something related to the speech being spoken. This function is called illocutionary. Speech based on its communicative function Searle (1979:13-20), and Leech (1993: 105-106) divide illocutionary speech acts that show the function of communication as assertive, declarative, expressive, directive, and commissive speech acts.

In the context of implicatures, the following is a brief explanation of each of these functions:

a. Assertive: The assertive function is used to convey information or reveal the truth of a statement. In the implicature, this function plays a role in implying that the speaker believes the truth of the statement conveyed.

b. Declarative: The declarative function is used to make a formal statement or announcement about a state or situation. Declarative implicatures can add additional meaning or imply the purpose or impact the announcement is trying to achieve.

c. Expressive: The expressive function is used to convey the personal feelings, emotions or attitudes of the speaker. Expressive implicature can provide information about feelings or attitudes that may not be explicitly conveyed in the statement itself.

d. Directive: The directive function is used to give instructions, requests, or advice to listeners. Directive implicature can involve a series of expectations or actions desired by the speaker.

e. Commissive: The commissive function is used to perform an action or promise to perform an action in the future. The commissive implicature can imply an intention or obligation to perform the act.

Research Method

The method used is freelance engagement, the recording method, and the note-taking method are in accordance with the theory expressed by (Mahsun, 2008). This type of research is descriptive qualitative because this method will be able to analyze in more detail the types of implicatures used in the stand up comedy show entitled Youtuber Many Haters on Raditya Dika's you tube channel.

Results and Discussion

Conventional Implicature

Conventional implicature can vary depending on the context and rules of the language used. These implicatures are not explicitly stated in the sentence, but can be understood or inferred through shared knowledge or a general understanding of the language and context used.

Conclusion

Based on the results of the conversational implicature analysis conducted by the author on Raditya Dika's Stand Up Comedy entitled Youtuber Many Haters which aired on December 19th 2017 on Raditya Dika's YouTube channel, researchers found conventional implicature and non-conventional implicature. The researcher also found 4 implicature functions, namely Assertive function, Expressive function, Directive function, and Commissive function. However, in this stand up comedy the researcher did not find a declarative function because the text is more likely to express the author's emotions, opinions, invitations, or intentions than to convey factual statements. Stand Up Comedy is a form of modern comedy art performance. Usually a comic or comedian appears in front of the audience bringing jokes, speaking directly to them and facing the reactions of the audience as well directly and instantly. In this story, Raditya Dika tells his experience when he met a YouTuber who has a lot of haters, which in the end Raditya Dika was carried away by his Haiters.
